URL FORWARDING - In short, when a user types in one domain name for a web site and is then redirected to another website. In the browser window, the destination address is displayed. User types in: <http://www.mydomainname.com> which has a URL Forward to <http://www.yourwebhost.com/filename/file.htm> but within the web browser, the destination address is displayed.

FRAME FORWARDING - When someone types in "<http://yourdomain.com>" they will be forwarded to an outside destination URL of your choice but they will still see the domain name in the browser window. We also allow the usage of description, keywords, and title, which are important to include with in the event a search engine "spider" or "bot" comes to the site; it will recognize the categories to help it determine what the site is for.

User types in: <http://www.mydomainname.com> which has a URL Forward to <http://www.yourwebhost.com/filename/file.htm> but within the web browser, the destination address is displayed.
